1. INTRODUCTION

University Hospitals of Northamptonshire (UHN) recognises the complexities of life and is therefore committed to supporting colleagues and helping them to achieve a balance between the demands of their jobs and personal responsibilities. Agile, flexible and hybrid working can give all colleagues a degree of choice and control over where when and how they work, whilst ensuring we have the right people in the right place at the right time.

It is therefore our position to support requests for agile, flexible or hybrid working and not to unreasonably refuse a request unless there is a genuine business reason.

In situations where we may have to refuse a request, we will work with colleagues to explore alternative options to endeavour to come to agreement on a different arrangement that is suitable for all.

This policy should be read in conjunction with the Working Time Regulations Policy. The Special Leave Policy gives information about other types of leave available that can assist with flexibility. The Flexible Retirement Policy details options available for flexibility when specifically related to retirement, or retirement planning. For requests that are made as part of a reasonable adjustment for a disabled colleague, reference should be made to any Trust policies and standard operating procedures linked to supporting disabled colleagues.

Further supporting information on Agile/Flexible/Hybrid Working can be found via

2. PURPOSE

This policy is aimed at providing guidance to all colleagues and managers on our approach and the rights colleagues have in relation to agile, flexible and hybrid working, along with the procedure for requesting, processing and managing requests.

For the purpose of this policy, flexible working covers:

- Agile Working – is a way of working that focuses on providing total flexibility in work to boost performance and productivity.
- Flexible Working – is a type of work pattern tailored for a specific member of staff in a bid to help them balance their work and personal life. This could include set or predictable shifts.
- Hybrid Working – is a work style that enables employees to blend working from different locations: home, on the go, in the office or a blend of these styles.

For the remainder of the document they will all be referred to as agile/flexible working.

3. Scope

This policy applies to all colleagues, including Medical and Dental staff, bank, agency and locum workers

4. SUBSTANTIVE CONTENT

4.1. Principles of Agile, Flexible or Hybrid Working

Through our practices we aim to be employers that attract, support and retain the best talent through agile/flexible working practices. We want to enable all our colleagues to be the best version of themselves and enhance our colleagues' health and wellbeing, through the provision of a better work life balance.

That means being open and honest about balancing work and life and ensuring the right conversations are happening to promote a truly diverse and inclusive environment, which supports colleagues who are looking to work more flexibly.

We recognise that agile/flexible working can have enormous advantages in that it can give colleagues greater control over their time, meaning greater productivity and efficiency by focussing on the right things at the right time. Health is improved by reducing stress and it can set us apart as an employer of choice.

We understand that colleagues work best when there is a balance between work and home life and therefore we are committed to adopting an agile/flexible culture in line with the NHS national direction of travel and key to harnessing the power of agility/flexibility for colleagues is creating a culture of high engagement through empowerment, autonomy and trust.

We will support requests for agile, flexible or hybrid working and not unreasonably refuse a request unless there is a genuine business reason, such as:

- Extra costs that will damage the organisation.
- The work cannot be reorganised among other staff.
- People cannot be recruited to do the work.
- Flexible working will affect quality and performance.
- The organisation will not be able to meet patient/service user demand.
- There is a risk to patient safety or the quality of the service provided.
- There is a lack of work to do during the proposed working times.
- The organisation is planning changes to the workforce.

This may mean at times it is not possible to accommodate all agile/flexible working requests. However in these circumstances managers and colleagues should work together to explore alternative options, to see if a different arrangement can be identified instead.

4.2. Options for Agile, Flexible or Hybrid Working

There are numerous options that can be considered to change your current working hours, patterns or location, including, but not limited to:

- Annualised hours – working your contracted hours flexibly throughout the year without affecting your regular salary payment. You are required to work a certain number of hours over the year, but you have some flexibility about when you work, within defined parameters such as core hours or when there's extra demand at work.
- Compressed hours working – where your contracted working hours are compressed into fewer days.
- Flexitime – working flexible hours during the day within defined limits, such as core hours each day.
- Home working – or a mix of home working and office-based work (hybrid).
- Job sharing – you and one or more people share responsibility for your current role.
- Part-time working – where working hours are less than your standard full-time hours, or those that you were initially contracted to work.
- Secondments/redeployment – a temporary or permanent move to another post that has the working pattern you have requested.
- Set hours – fixed hours and days to give certainty that other commitments can be fitted around work.
- Staggered working hours – working a set number of hours during the day but with different start and finish times.
- Term time working – concentrating your work hours within school term times to provide time off to look after children during school holidays.
- Voluntary reduction in working time – working fewer hours for an agreed period.

4.3. Process for Applying for a Change to Working Arrangements

4.3.1. Informal

Any agile/flexible working request that is not going to result in a contractual change can be made informally through, a conversation between you and your line manager. This can include any requests for temporary or short-term variations. However should you prefer to make a formal request for this type of change, please refer to section 4.3.2.

If you are wishing to undertake your work at a home or hybrid working, then this again can be informally agreed and initiated through discussion between you and your line manager. However if you are wishing to change your nominated base of work, as detailed on your contract of employment, this will need to be done formally as per section 4.3.2.

Sufficient time should be dedicated for these informal discussions to consider how the proposal will work and the expectations to ensure transparency and a clear understanding. A practical, flexible, and sensitive approach should be taken. A written record should be made following the discussion with a copy to you setting out the discussion so that everyone is clear on what has been agreed.

Team activities/meetings and any team communications should be planned in such a way to ensure you and your colleagues can fully participate.

Managerial consideration must be given to any cost implications which could arise from agreement to the request.

Your manager has the discretion to review informal arrangements and reasonable notice should be given to alter or cease any arrangement.

Your line manager should seek advice from the People Partnering Team for any support with the above.

Should an informal request be declined, you can submit a formal request, if you wish, as per the process detailed below in section 4.3.2.

If you have a temporary request that you would like to request to extend beyond the original agreed end date either temporarily or on a more permanent basis you can either apply again via the informal or formal process

4.3.2. Formal

Any change that will result in a change to your contract of employment must be done formally by completing an Agile Working Application Form found at Appendix B.

It is essential when your line manager is considering any formal agile/flexible working request to look at the impact on the rest of the team and other stakeholders, to ensure an effective and safe service provision can be maintained and objectives can be met.

It is important that you understand that a contractual change may affect your pay, annual leave entitlement and your pension contributions (if applicable). In general terms all benefits will apply pro-rata to the hours worked. Further guidance can be sought from the People Partnering Team, the Pensions Department and Finance.

If your role includes an on-call requirement, and you will be continuing this as part of your agile/flexible working agreement, this will be undertaken on a pro rata basis, if your agile/flexible working request results in lesser hours being undertaken.

Your line manager should make a decision within 4 weeks of receiving your request and cannot take longer than 2 months to come to a decision, unless this has been agreed with you. They can consult the People Partnering Team for advice upon receipt of a formal request for agile/flexible working.

If your manager can accommodate your request, then this can be agreed locally and confirmed in writing with a copy placed on your personal file and a copy to the People Partnering Team. A Change Form will be required to action the change on ESR. The letter will act as confirmation that your contract of employment has been varied.

If your manager has a legitimate concern about an agile/flexible working application and whether it will work in practice they will meet with you to discuss the request, if they are unable to immediately accommodate it. At this meeting they should explore other options with you to identify if there are alternative arrangements that can be considered.

Your manager can also consider a trial period to enable a test of the arrangement and gather clear insight as to how it will work in practice before committing to it on a longer-term basis. Before making this decision, they must again meet with you to discuss this thoroughly. The length of the trial period is to be agreed between you and your manager and we would recommend that it is between 3-6 months in length. At the end of the trial period the arrangement can be agreed formally in writing if it has been successful. However should you or your manager feel that the trial period has not been successful further conversations should take place regarding any possible alternative arrangements.

If, having explored alternative options with you, they cannot see a way to effectively balance your needs with the wider service and there is a genuine business reason, your line manager should discuss the request with the People Partnering Team in the first instance. You will then be invited to a meeting with your line manager who will fully explain the rationale as to why it is not possible to accommodate the request. The meeting date will be confirmed to you, in writing, giving at least seven calendar days' notice. Your line manager may be supported by a member of the People Partnering Team, and you can be accompanied by a Trade Union representative or workplace colleague. You will then be written to by your manager to document the rationale as to why it cannot be accommodated and providing you with a right of appeal. (See Section 4.5).

4.4. Handling Agile Working Requests Fairly

The right to request agile/flexible working is a 'day one' right and you can make more than one flexible working request in a 12 month period.

If your line manager receives more than one agile/flexible working request at the same time or very close together, it may not be possible to grant all of the requests received. However, before doing so the line manager will need to look closely at the impact this would have on the department and service provision, before coming to a decision.

Requests should be considered in the order they are received. Your line manager is not required to make a judgement about the most deserving request. Each request should be considered on its own merits by looking at the operational and service needs of the department and the possible impact of refusing a request.

Your line manager should have a discussion with you and your colleagues to see if there is any room for adjustment or compromise before coming to an overall decision, however the details of yours and your colleague's request must not be discussed with any other affected colleagues, unless permission has been sought to do so.

Ultimately, decisions should be made on whether or not the service/department can support the change you and/or your colleagues have requested.

If your line manager is unable to approve a request due to the fact a number of other colleagues are already working flexibly and any further arrangements will adversely impact service provision, they can consider calling for volunteers from colleagues who have an existing agile/flexible working arrangement. By doing this your line manager may be able to create capacity to consider new requests if other colleagues volunteer to make adjustments to their current agile/flexible working arrangements. This could include changing their contract back to their original arrangement, or to an alternative/new arrangement, from a date that is mutually agreeable. Again, details of the agile/flexible working requests made by others must not be discussed with the other members of the team, unless permission has been sought to do so.

At any point your line manager can consult the People Partnering Team for advice.

4.5. The Right to Appeal Formal Agile/Flexible Working Requests

If you have had a formal request declined you can appeal by writing to your line manager's manager, stating the grounds for the appeal. This must be received by the appropriate manager within seven calendar days of getting the letter advising of the decision.

Appeals will normally be heard by your line manager's manager (or another manager of an equivalent level of authority not previously involved). The date will be confirmed to you, in writing, giving at least seven calendar days' notice. The appeal manager will be supported by a member of the People Partnering Team who will act as the advisor.

You can be accompanied by a Trade Union representative or workplace colleague and you may wish to discuss:

- The reason your request cannot be accommodated.
- Any new information that was not available to your line manager at the time of the original decision.
- If you think the refusal was not reasonable in line with the policy.

Your line manager will also be in attendance so they can provide information and the rationale as to why they declined the agile/flexible working request.

The decision reached by the appeal manager will be final and there is no further right of appeal.

The outcome of the appeal must be confirmed in writing with a copy placed on your personal file and a copy to the People Partnering Team. If the outcome of the appeal is that the agile/flexible working request or a compromised arrangement/alternative solution is accepted, the letter will act as an amendment to your contract and will confirm the agreed change and the effective date.

If there is a change to contractual hours, your line manager must ensure that a Change Form is submitted in a timely manner as this will affect your salary, annual leave and pension (if applicable).
